Market update:

Last week saw mixed market performance, with only the Dow Jones Industrial Average finishing higher, up 0.75%. The S&P 500 dropped 0.83%, and the Nasdaq fell 2.08%.

Economic data supported the case for a rate cut, with Q2 GDP growth at 2.9% (above the 2.7% forecast) and the PCE report meeting expectations at 2.5%, still above the Fed's 2% target. The probability of a 25-basis point rate cut in September is nearly 100%, with some speculation about a potential 50-basis point cut due to recent volatility. However, I expect a 25-basis point cut. Q2 earnings season is in full swing, and results have been mixed, especially in the tech sector.

While the FOMC rate decision is this week, the labor market report is even more critical. A recent slight uptick in unemployment could lead the Fed to consider a 50-basis point cut if further labor market weakness is evident. The Phillips Curve, which shows an inverse relationship between unemployment and inflation, suggests now is the right time for the Fed to ease, with inflation contained and unemployment shaky.
